

A New Restaurant in Hong Kong

Recently, a brand-new restaurant called Dim Sim One has opened its doors to the public and quickly become the talk of the town. Intrigued, I decided to visit the restaurant with my family members. It is located on Lamma Island. Although it took us a long time to get there, it was worth the effort as the food at Dim Sim One was on par with that of five-star hotels.

Food

Upon entering the restaurant, we were immediately greeted by the enticing aroma of food. I thought there were printing errors when I read the menu as it said "Buns' Buns". However, my confusion was cleared when I saw the photo of small bunny-shaped buns. I got even more excited as I read the names of the other dishes on the menu. In my opinion, the standout was the "Shapes and Colours Bun", which allows diners to choose their preferred shape and color. Additionally, the restaurant introduces a new dish every month. The most recent one I saw was the "Demonic Bun," featuring a bun with a demon face, tail and horns. There was even an evil dragon beside it!

Service

I was initially startled by a witch welcoming us and handing out some "potions" to us at the dim sum hall. My younger sister even believed they were real potions. However, it turned out to be juice and water with food coloring. After that, a robot waiter appeared out of nowhere and politely inquired about what we wanted. Approximately three minutes later, we witnessed the food being delivered by a robotic arm descending from the ceiling. The arm gently placed the dishes on the table. It was an extraordinary dining experience in a Chinese restaurant with robots as servers.

Overall, this restaurant was amazing and there's not much to complain about. If I were to nitpick, the only drawback would be its location on a faraway island. Nevertheless, I thoroughly enjoyed my meal there, and there's no reason why this restaurant couldn't be considered one of the top 10 restaurants in Hong Kong. I highly recommend giving Dim Sim One a go.
